

Letters and Legacies: Robert Frost and His Contemporaries. Major projects publishing the complete correspondence of Robert Frost, T. S. Eliot, and Ernest Hemingway are currently underway. These projects promise to change our views not only of the personal character of these writers but also of the ways these writers reflected or established specific varieties of modernist networks, aesthetics, genres, and stances. This roundtable invites contributions that approach Frost and/or these, or other, modernist writers and their legacies in light of their letters.
