ALA 2017

The Constance Fenimore Woolson Society would like to extend the stimulating discussion initiated at last year's ALA on Teaching Recovered Women Writers to this year's ALA in Boston, May 25-28.

As a follow-up to two productive roundtables on teaching recovered women writers at last year's ALA, the Woolson Society is putting together a panel for the Boston ALA on the same subject. One of the most urgent issues that emerged from the discussion of recovering women writers two years ago, in a roundtable sponsored by SSAWW, was the need to help our colleagues fit recovered writers into their courses. (Many who participated in that discussion were not present in San Francisco, so we hope they will join in the discussion this year in Boston.) If recovered writers aren't taught, then texts go out of print, writers disappear from anthologies, and the recovery process comes to a halt. Please send a brief email by Dec. 30 to aeboyd@uno.edu introducing yourself and telling us about what you would like to discuss. We highly encourage unconventional presentations rather than standard conference papers.
