The Lydia Maria Child Society welcomes proposals for a social-justice pedagogy roundtable and an open-topic panel!

Social-Justice Pedagogy Roundtable

The Lydia Maria Child Society seeks participants for a roundtable on pedagogy, social justice, and American literature. Considering contemporary social justice concerns ranging from the Black Lives Matter movement to the Dakota Access Pipeline controversy to persistent gender inequities and xenophobia made all too apparent by the 2016 presidential election and the resulting anti-woman and anti-immigrant policies, the Child Society feels strongly that many of the issues for which Child fought so passionately remain deeply relevant today. To honor her lifelong commitment to both education and writing as ways to attain social change, we ask that our selected panelists prepare brief presentations (approximately 10 minutes) on how they address the above issues and/or others within the literature classroom, before engaging in what we hope will be a fruitful and wide-ranging open discussion on social justice pedagogies and American literature. What texts and social issues have proved particularly pertinent to your students' lived experiences of activism, marginalization, etc.? How do you productively draw parallels between the concerns of the literary works you teach and those we are facing in the world outside the classroom? What specific lesson plans, textual pairings/groupings, and/or other pedagogical approaches might you recommend to colleagues striving to make their syllabi and classrooms more socially conscious and engaged?

Please send 200-word abstracts of your proposed presentation, as Word documents, to lydiamariachildsociety@gmail.com by January 20, 2019. Note that while we, of course, welcome proposals that engage with Child's work, Child need not be included for your proposal to be considered.

Open-Topic Panel

The Lydia Maria Child Society loves sharing ideas about Lydia Maria Child and her work, particularly the work that has spoken the most to you as a reader, a writer, a student, an instructor, a librarian, a human-rights advocate, a parent, and/or an individual. We therefore welcome proposals for our open-topic panel that engage with any aspect of Child's work. What aspects of Child's life and writing have motivated you to self-reflect? To explore specific genres of reading and/or writing? To change the way(s) you perceive social responsibility? To engage actively in social reform at home, at work, in the classroom, or in the community? To create and/or overhaul a course? To share in other personal and/or professional contexts the specific elements that make you passionate about Child's work? Please share your ideas with us!

Please send 200-word abstracts, as Word documents, to Sandy Burr at sburr@nmu.edu by January 19, 2020. Early submissions welcome!
