Topic: Henry Adams and Science

Although known primarily as an historian and belletristic writer, Henry Adams maintained a life-long interest in science and worked hard to educate himself on modern scientific theories both through his association with prominent scientists and his personal reading. We invite papers that touch on any aspect of Adams's connection to science or that employ elements of scientific knowledge as a lens through which to read any of his works. Paper presentations should be no longer than 20 minutes. Please include in your proposal whether you need AV equipment for your presentation.

Send abstracts of your paper by January 20, 2022 to either William Merrill Decker (william.decker@okstate.edu) or John Orr (orr@up.edu).
