

Posthumanities and Citizenship Futures

Given the rapid and extensive developments in the techno-scientific sphere, there is a need to conceive new narratives for our species and planet that extend beyond anthropocentrism. This series reflects on the possible future outcomes of humanity and defamiliarizes the mainstream narratives about how we construct, perform, and protect our identities as humans. Books in this series explore the implications of human and non-human life forms' coexistence within our networked world. We encourage the submission of proposals that take cross-cultural and transnational approaches, foster an ongoing dialogue between academics and scholars around the world, and explore the intersection between biosphere and technosphere in a more-than-human world.
